

Deep-Root Watering

Spring? FEELS LIKE SUMMER!

With a hot and dry year ahead of us, TreeLife is offering a Deep-Root Watering service.

Heat and water stress can cause irreparable biological damage through interconnected physiological failures.

1. Carbon starvation risk (reduced photosynthesis and stomatal closure)
2. Xylem cavitation and dysfunction (water columns break forming embolisms (air bubbles) blocking water flow from roots to leaves)
3. Root dessication
4. Hormone gradient and biological system disruptions
5. Secondary disorder and pest development

Put simply, the improper, inadequate application of water causes a domino effect of biological system failures at the molecular level. This is an all too common scenario: Heat and water stress result in stressed trees - secondary disorders set in - the secondary issue is visible, and considered the problem - treat for secondary issue without resolving the underlying water deficit - tree death still ensues despite treatment.
